Overview

Dr. Pamela Koch conducts research with schools and communities to give people power to demand healthy, just, sustainable food. She translates her research into curricula for school teachers, recommendations for policy makers, and resources for advocates. She has evaluated many school-based programs that improve school meals, create school gardens, conduct cooking sessions, and promote food justice. She has taught several courses within the Program in Nutrition at Teachers College since 1996, including: Strategies for Nutrition Education and Health Behavior Change (1996–2013), Nutritional Ecology (2012–present), Community Nutrition (2013–present), Food, Nutrition and Behavior (2005), Seminar in Nutrition Education (2005). She also teaches an online professional development course for educators, Teaching Food and Nutrition for All. Her work contributes to increased access to nutritious, delicious and sustainable food for all. She completed her BS and MS from Rutgers University and her EdD and RD from Teachers College, Columbia University.
